

GDPR is not as scary as you think, and we can show you why – a practical workshop

By now you will have heard about the General Data Protection Regulation (GDPR). You might have listened in to a number of webinars, attended a seminar (maybe even one of ours), or downloaded some free guidance. And you are still wondering how to go about putting it all into place to make your company GDPR compliant.

The practical workshops we are running are now your next step and you will come away from one not only understanding how the new Regulation will affect YOUR business, but also with a set of company-specific working documents and an action plan of what you need to do to get there.

Even if you already have robust policies and procedures in place relating to data protection they will nonetheless still need to be amended to reflect the requirements of GDPR.

Now is the time to start preparing to ensure that you meet the requirements of GDPR by the time it comes into force on 25th May 2018.

In the workshop we will help you put GDPR in context for your business and look at how we can support you through a painless GDPR journey.

You will come away from the workshop having started and, depending on the complexity of your business, maybe even have completed:

- An analysis of the flow of personal data in to, within and out of your business.
- A register of the data that your business holds about your employees, prospects and customers and why you hold it.
- The information you require for Privacy Notices specific to your company.
- An analysis of the high-risk business processes that involve personal data.
- An action plan of items you need to work on back in your business

We limit the number of attendees at each of our workshops to ensure there is a maximum of three attendees to one consultant.

Cathy is talking at the Swindon & Wiltshire Women in Business Conference 2018

“ I recently attended the “GDPR is not as scary as you think” workshop, and found it to be very helpful, relaxed and interactive. I have recommended it to several people in similar situations to me, and will return to attend other workshops in the future.
